

Located near Tivoli, a few miles outside Rome, the world-famous Villa Adriana appears as a rich complex of buildings built gradually and extended over a large area, which must have covered about 120 hectares, in an area rich in water. Among the many rustic villas that since the republican age had been constructed between Rome and Tivoli, there was already one built in the early 1st century BC and enlarged at the time of Julius Caesar, and later possibly belonging to the Emperor Hadrian's wife, Vibia Sabina, who came from a family of ancient Italic nobility. The Emperor Hadrian is therefore the origin of the name of this villa, which over the years became incorporated into the Imperial Palace. In 1999 Villa Adriana was declared a World Heritage Site by UNESCO.

VILLA ADRIANA

Marco Filippetti

Roman painter Marco Filippetti could be called a landscape artist, in that he considers the human body as the ultimate frontier to explore. His quest for the essence of the human form has led him to approach it from every possible angle, venturing into the representation of irrational thought, sports, and eroticism.

His artworks are on display in all of Federico's apartments and in the multifunctional space and luggage storage located at Via Ostilia 4b. All paintings are available for purchase.

Have a great stay!

At the end of your stay, we encourage you to leave feedback on the particular platform where you originally made your booking, and, if you wish, also on TripAdvisor, Google, Facebook, and/or Instagram. We are anxious to know that you were happy.

For no matter what problem or concern that may arise, please do not hesitate to contact us, and my staff will do its very best to help you.

In the accompanying booklet, you will find all of my recommendations for restaurants, shops, services, and walks in the neighborhood where we might well bump into each other. The booklet also provides information on all of the services we offer.

It is a real pleasure to welcome you. Thanks for choosing this apartment for your stay in Rome, and I sincerely hope that it will render your vacation a pleasant and comfortable one.

Dear Guest,

Federico
